(Sponsored by Nutrigenomix, Inc)
There is increasing awareness among researchers, educators, healthcare professionals and consumers that the one-size-fits-all, population-based approach to nutritional guidance is inefficient and sometimes ineffective. Genetic differences can explain these different responses and randomized controlled trials show that DNA-based dietary recommendations can improve compliance. With increasing awareness and demand for nutrigenetic testing, there is a need for registered dietitian nutritionists to have sufficient knowledge to understand and determine the benefits and limitations of the science and testing.
- 9:45- 10:00 Break (Kerry Coughlin, MS, RD, CSO - Stretching and Advocacy)
- 10:00-11:00 Changing the Sports Nutrition Conversation: Does Weight Help or Hurt Athletic Performance?
Nancy Clark, MS, RD, CSSD, internationally respected sports nutritionist, weight coach, and nutrition author with a private practice in Newton Highlands, MA
(Sponsored by the Connecticut Milk Promotion Board and New England Dairy)
This session will take a look at the age-old belief “The thinnest athlete is the best athlete,” the harm this has created among athletic people, and what we as RDs can do to change the culture.
- 11:00- 11:30 Inclusive Health for Persons with Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities
Dr. Melissa L Brown RD, CSSD, LD, Chair, Department of Nutrition and Public Health University of Saint Joseph, Director of Graduate Options in Nutrition and Sports Nutrition.

Most healthcare professionals, including dietitians, receive minimal training working with people with intellectual disabilities (ID). Mainstream clinical guidelines and tools are not designed to address the unique concerns of this population and the system lacks validated assessment instruments, as well as, covered services. This population and the system lacks validated assessment instruments, as well as, covered services. This subsequently excludes people with ID from receiving equitable healthcare.
